DISCONTENTED JACK TARS.

It is, perhaps, surprising to some of the Navai Reserve men who worked so faithfully last week on the good ships of the White Squadron, to learn that the larger proportion of desertions from the many is reported from those very boats. To the landsmen, practising there for a week, life on board seemed most fascinating, and more than one of the students in naval tactics probably thought he would enjoy immensely a steady career on a

The real Jack Tar, however, thinks he finds the labor too great for the pay and other considerations in the new ships. The very spick and span newness of things in the squadron has led to this result. There is an inspiration on the part of the officers of each ship to scep everything looking fresh, bright and handsome. They give the orders and the tars do the rest, and it keeps the sailors twins, I should be a father.

We are accustomed to think of Jack Tar as a jolly fellow. It is hard to conceive of him as discontented, a grumbler and a deserter Let something be done, by all means, to reasonably ease his lot and keep him as he should be. It is very necessary that we have him whole, hearty and ready to render us his full service.

WHERE IS THIS STREET CLI ANER? According to Mayor GRANT, "the Street-Cleaning Department can hardly take advice from a lot of novices." This remark conveys an intimation that a practical street cleaner is concealed somewhere about the Department.

For pity's sake, Mayor, have Mr. BEAT-THE turn him loose. We need him every day and every hour.
